

Acknowledgements

This project has needed cooperation, help and hard work from a vast array of individuals and organisations, partners and helpers.

On these pages we acknowledge the debt that Clitheroe Civic Society and the Project Team owe to those involved.

If you helped in any way but don't see your name or logo here we apologise, but please don't think that your contribution was not appreciated - just blame the editor!

These entries are not placed in any hierarchy. What is an apparently large contribution from an organisation is, in many ways, no more important to the success of the project than a supportive comment or loan of a photograph from an individual.

Clitheroe Pinnacle Project

The Clitheroe Pinnacle Project was conceived by the Clitheroe Civic Society to repair and consolidate a stone pinnacle that had originally formed part of the House of Parliament.

This book tells the story of why it was in London in the first place, how it got there and why it was re-located in Clitheroe.

Using contributions from many of those involved in the project you will hear what obstacles had to be overcome, how the funds were raised and what decisions were needed in order to achieve a fabulous result.
